Search Engine for Video Game Tournaments Announced

Jet Set Studio has successfully launched an all-new search engine for video game tournaments worldwide, called Tournament Seeker.

Seattle, Washington - September 1, 2012: Jet Set Studio, an Iowa-based company that manages video game events around North America, unveiled an all-new search engine for video game tournaments at PAX Prime today, which is now publicly available on www.TournamentSeeker.com.

Tournament Seeker is an online application unlike any other, which allows competitive gamers to quickly find video game events that are both online and at live venues around the world. With intuitive search options, an interactive event calendar, and sleek navigation, Tournament Seeker is unmatched with how easy it is to find any type of video game tournament.

Tournament Seeker also represents an effort to give the gift of free visibility to video game event organizers. Whether it is a small local tournament or a worldwide event, Tournament Seeker has implemented an easy-to-use tournament listing engine that allows organizers to professionally showcase any video game tournament at no cost. Event listing upgrades are available to affordably boost the visibility of any tournament listing, but these upgrades are in no way required.

Another valuable pillar of functionality available on www.TournamentSeeker.com is an extensive library, called Resource Central. This exclusive collection of video game event management ideas and proven techniques are free to online visitors and are intelligently organized into three primary categories: Conceptualization, Preparation, and Event Management.

Without anything like it on the Internet, Tournament Seeker is leading the way to connect competitive gamers and the entire eSports community, with the exciting video game tournaments they seek.
